PRIDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 19, 1869. EXPERIMENTS OF FREE LABOR IN THE tions we ever remember to have heard of the impracticability of extensively cultivating Southern soil by free labor, either white or black, are related in a speech of a distinguished South Carolinian in the House of Representatives. Experiments of this kind have been tried in both South Carolina and Florido, and with similar results. The Rev. Mr. Capers, a distinguished minister of the Methodist Church, gave up his own plantation to his slaves, having previously endeavored to prepare them for their trust by a thorough moral and religious training. It was after harvest when he delivered over the plantation, and he left them with barns full, with stock of cattle and sheep, and a horse to plough. On leaving them, he gave there all the good advice, both as to the management of the estate and their own conduct | Giddiness, Gravel, Headaches, of every kind, Inwhich his own experience and his observance suggested. After the lapse of several harvests, Mr. Capers returned to the scenes of his philanthropy, to see how the objects of his benevolence were coming on. He Land the fields uncultivated, the cattle eaten up, the barns empty, and the horse employed, not to plough or cart, but to convey the negroes to the neighboring plantations to depredate. Another failure in an experiment of tree black labor was in the year 1840, when the estates in Trinidad, which had flourished under slave labor, became, in consequence of West India emancipation, deserted by the laborers. A planter came to this country, and from the District of Columbia and the State of Maryland many free negroes were induced to go to Trinidad, to cultivate the land upon the most advantageous terms. This enterprise resulted in a compicte failure. The free negroes found the sun too hot, and resorted to the towns or returned to this country. The next experiment mentioned is of white labor, and the experimenter was the distinguished William Wirt, who had resolved to become a planter and purchased land in Florida. Having some scruples, he determined against the employment of slave labor, and carried down to his plantation a large number of white men. The work was commenced in the autumn.-The men worked with industry and fidelity during the winter and spring seasons, and all went on as systematically and energetically sooner in full bloom than they were blighted. Summer came, and the gourd of Jonah withered as rapidly as it had grown. Hot days and moist nights, and increased demands for labor in the cotton fields, took all mans could not keep off the hot days, the moist nights and the mosquitoes, and they also went away, leaving the New York gentleman without a laborer upon the plantation. There were no negroes in the neighhorhood, and he lost his crop and abandon-In some of the Southern States the thermometer ranges from 113 to 130° Fahrenheit, a comfortable temperature for a sable skin, but no white man can live under it. In some of the most fertile regions of the Southern States, not only is white labor impracticable, but the families of the proprietors ews were relaxed, and finding that they could not endure the climate, they threw down their agricultural implements, and left the

In 1622 wheat was introduced and sown on the Elizabeth Island, Massachusetts, In 1611 it was sown in Virginia, and in 1648 hundreds of acres of it was grown in that colony, though soon afterward tobacco claimed precedence, and wheat became neglected. It was in 1718 that it was first grown in Mississippi Valley, but it did not succeed well, owing to the peculiar character of the soil, growing too much to straw, and producing but little grain; however, in 1746, in consequence of the better culture perhaps, it was exported from the Wabash Valley to New Orleans. During the last fifteen years, the gain in the production of this crop in the United States has been over sixteen million bushels, while at the same time it has been decreased in New England over one million bushels .-It is estimated that one bushel of seed is used to every ten produced, and that three bushels are used annually to every individual of the
